Inevitably at some point during the life of a project, the project manager will be required to present the status of the project, often to major stakeholder and / or the Board. Training in this area is scant at best throughout the training process for project management. However, if it is accepted that communication is vital for project success, then it is essential that the project manager is able to present the status of the project in a succinct and effective manner. This report from David McGimpsey makes informed reading.
