Rob Leslie-Carter will present the findings of The Future of Project Management (FoPM) which was collaborated research taken by APM, Arup, and the Bartlett School of Construction and Project Management, with crowd-sourced inputs from the global project management community.

FoPM is designed to provide the insights, ideas and inspiration to help you future proof your project management career and your projects. It explores the trends that will have global impacts on the way we deliver change through projects, imagines plausible futures through the eyes of our clients, and outlines plans for future action and research, including how you can get involved!

Rob is a Director with Arup based in London. He has worked around the world with Arup for 25 years, and specialises in the planning, set-up, leadership and delivery of complex infrastructure and property projects both on client side and as a leader of multidisciplinary teams.
